Description

Food insecurity is one of the most critical issues humanity has faced in history. The magnitude of this phenomenon, reflected in its worldwide presence and in the number of individuals affected, makes it an imperative component of all nations' and of all international agencies' agendas. Its complexity of determinants and its numerous consequences require the involvement of multiple disciplines and sectors. McGill undergraduate students as future professionals tackling global issues require an integrated and multidisciplinary training on food security.

- Corequisite(s): NUTR 207 or permission of Instructor
